NEWSPAPERS IN THE ARMY.

The Energy, Baring and Enterprise of Army News Agents.

THE RAGE FOR THE HERALD.

Scenes at Army News Stands and in Camp,

Crry Penst, April 20, 1865.

One who had never seen anything of army life could not fail of feeling disappointed upon his first arrival at City Point. It is impossible to convey an accurate im-City Point. It is impossible to convey an accurate impression of the place merely by description. Each one unconsciously forms a certain picture in his own mind of how things will look, and what he shall see, which, however it may differ in different individuals, is certain to be alike in the one point of bearing—no resemblance to truth. It is true that the Northern papers have been to truth. It is true that the Northern papers have been filled for months with accounts and descriptions of all prominent points visited by our armies; but the little things that form the individuality of a place, and which strike a stranger sooner than anything eise are "old stories" to army correspondents who have lived in camp for months or years, and are rarely seized upon to "point a moral or adorn a tale." The rapid marching, the stubborn fighting, the dreaiful slaughter, the carnage of continued battle and the after horrors of the field and hospital, can alone inspire them to touch the heart or seeth tal, can alone inspire them to touch the heart or seeth the brain of their distant readers. These events follow-ing closely one upon another soon crowd out all lesser considerations, and the constant tendency of army experience is to render correspondents indifferent to the minor details of surroundings or movements.

NEWSPAPERS IN THE ARMY. City Point for nearly a year presented the appearance of a vast workshop or hive of industry. Its streets and wagon ways were crowded with teams, its wharves and wagon ways were crowded with teams, its warves and thoroughfares thronged with soldiers and civilians, and its town plot covered thickly over with tents, huts, booths, and marts of trade. Many branches of mechani-cal industry were represented, and a respectable list of mercantile pursuits prosecuted. But the glories of the place have departed, and as one threads its dingy, dirty wagon ways, or wanders through the deserted head-quarters of General Grant, he feels all the sentiment of battle alone for a longer lease of life. All else seems quietly succumbing. Here, as everywhere else, the newspaper enterprise runs in the van. Of all the civil avocations permitted by the military authorities to accompany or follow in the wake of the army, none equal in magnitude or importance the moment, when the Union flag floats over fortified posts in every State of the Union, the armies of the United States have marched from victory to victory with extra cartridges in one pocket and Extra Heraius in the columns with all the celerity and vigor that the entire resources and appliances of the government could bring with the latest dailies have invariably preceded them to the front of the fight, far away in the enemy's country. stripped the efforts of government in minor operations. In no particular has the fact been so clearly apparent as in the manner and regularity with which our troops have been supplied with the news of the day. For the purpose of illustration, the Army of the Potomac will be taken as a sample, and J. M. Lamb, the prin-In 1861, when it lay in front of Yorktown under General McCleilan, a number of newsdealers were engaged in offices of publication to Fortress Monroe and thence conveyed, by transient boats and government vessels, to Cheeseman's Landing, which was at that time the base of supplies in the rear of the army. But government transports were soon found to be too slow and uncertain to be trust d where success depended on minutes. The rivalry between compatitors was too keen to allow hours or days to slip away between shipments. So, notwithstanding the roads were bad and obscure, the country swarming with bands of desperadoes, and every thicket by the ter in charge organized a line of wagons and pack mules and transported their papers from Fortress Monroe across the country to the flank of the army, in the face of the difficulties and dangers of the undertaking. At that time were engaged in the business. SPECIAL AGENTS-THE TRIBUNE

Several metropolitan, and not a few provincial papers, finding the army orders for their respective sheets declining from day to day, adopted the plan of sending out special agents for the exclusive sale of their own dallies. Among these was Mr. Kinney, who came charged with the heavy responsibility of bolstering up the waning influence and sale of the New York T. ibnne. "His punishment was greater than he could bear."

with the heavy responsibility of botstering up the waning influence and sale of the New York Tribune. "His punishment was greater than he could bear." He strugged for a season with a manfulness descring a bester fate, but finally sunk a miserable victim of Tribune dead weight and intellectual flatness. With his agency was buried that paper's last hope of army cisculation. The trump of no political Gabriel has ever resurrected it.

These gentlemen continued to ply their vocation of giving to the army its intellectual repeats, varying "from grave to gay, from lively to severe," secording to the humor of the day and the character of the journals and periodical distr buted, throughout the memorable campaign up the penins la, across to Harrison's Landing, and back through Washington city to the upper Potomac. When the army lay in Maryland, beyond Frederick, pak miles were again the medes of conveyance from the nearest point to which transportation could be obtained by rail. About the time of Sandy Hook being made the base, Clark & Huil opened an agency for newspapers, in addition to the others named, and all followed closely in the wake back to Acquia creek. At this point, Dan. O'Ne1, of New York city, and Mr. Gregory, of Alexandria, Va., entered the list of competitors. In addition to all these, Mr. Jackson, of Philadelphia, came on as special agent for the Philadelphia Inquirer, and the newspaper trade of the army presented an array of native shrewdness and business talent rarely exceeded in any single branch of business.

Entitl the accession of General Hooker to the command of the army, permits had been granted to all unobjectionable applicants who desired to engage in the business. Such rivalry naturally engendered il-feeling and pride complaints of sharp practice and alune of privileges began to accumulate against to engage in the business. Such rivalry naturally engendered life leging and privilege of the complaints, and we complaints and to the charge of the complaints and the complaints and to the complaint

When the army moved from culpepper at the commencement of last year's campaign against Richmond, Mr. Lamb was notified that he must suspend the sale of newspapers unt? Intribute orders. On reaching Cold Harbor, with a base at White House, on the Pamunk y river, the prohibition was removed, and his besiness received an additional impetus from its temporary suspension. On moving to the James for a base his supplies were referred from Fort Monroe to City Point in time to meet the army; but the ponton bridge as Fort Powha'an prevented boats from coming up for several days, and caused a loss of eighty thousand papers that accumulated and were out of date before he could reach the from.

The concurrent testimony of all engaged in the business is that 1862 was the palmy year for the army sale of newspapers. Our soldiers were then, to a great extent, a different and a better order of men. No conscripts, no bounty jumpers, and but few shoulder hitters, were then in the service. All were intelligent, intellectual, reading patrois. War, war news and war experiences were a novelty. Those in the service, in common with those out of it, ransa-ked every paper they could possibly obtain and devoured its contents with exceeding gusto. The extent of army reading is in exact ratio to the worth and intelligence of its members. Early in the war every Union soldier was a newspaper patron. After four years of strife thousands in the ranks never read.

The relative sales of the different leading dailies at the make never read.

The relative alone of the different leading dailies at different periods since the beginning of the war presents some interesting features, and affore food for relation. In the ottest the papers with the desire the beginning of the war presents some interesting description of the desire of the war period accordingly at a later period it was accordinate that enterprise annihilated time and space in and Baltimore papers, almost as the door of the army, were in fact indebted to reprisa from New York papers of all that gave them value.

Landing, the average daily sales were in the neighborhood of twenty thousand. Of these not less than elecenthoomand were New York Two K. Rock. Ed. dailles, weeklies and pletotals. From some unexplanable cause the Philadelphia frequiere at that time aims and an army sale and pletotals. From some unexplanable cause the Philadelphia frequiere at that time aims and an army sale in the tasginglenat circulation of one thousand who have desired to the control of the c interally rode down all obstructions. Wise people gave them wide berths, and fools paid well for the folly of not doing so.

Arriving at the outskirts of their divisions, the boys are seen surrounded by officers and privates, and much the same so nes are enacted as daily occur at City Point. Hundreds of bronzed and weather-beaten veterans can be seen sitting on stumps and logs, leaning against trees or out their muskets, reading the latest Haran, studying its war maps, discussing the "military situation," and foresting for the time cold and hunger, home and friends, war and its stern realities. Some broad cheeked, deep lunged comrade is generally selected to read aloud; and few more picturesque groups can be found in the army or out of it than the brawny, stalwart fellows who are standing, lounging and reclining in all attitudes, with upturned faces and breathless interest.

Even the sailow convalescent who comes feebly on a cane or hobbling on a crutch catches the infection, is raised into forgetfulness and transfigured into glowing, animated vitality. Perhaps the news is of therman or Sheridan, of Farragut or Porter, of Charleston or Fort Fisher, and as the listeners become enverage they use a sciously change their positions and grow into living tableaux. The lazy man of the squad, stretched at full length on the ground, comes to a half erect position; the nervous, wiry little fellow, reclining gracefully on one elbow, springs to his feet like the click of a jackknife; the jolly fellow, standing on a pine knot, looking over the reader's shoulder; the abstracted one of the crowd, who has been trying to balance an old tobacco quid on the point of a Minnie ball, and the transfigured convalescent, who has dropped his cane or crutch, all break out simultaneously in a prolonged, uppoarious shout and telegraph the arrival of "good news" for miles around.

Neighboring regiments are awakened by the cheering, and the newsboy and mule become the centre of attraction till the supply of papers is ezhausted, or until, late

OPINION OF CHIEF JUSTICE BIGELOW.

(From the Boston Advertiser, April 29.)

The following is the conclusion of the charge of Chief Justice Bigelow to the jury in the case of Leonard Sturevant against Aaron H. Allen, for illegal arrest and imprisonment. The principles of law involved in the case, which were new as well as important, were the series of the control o defendant to the United States Marshai were privileged communications.

There—How far the defendant was responsible for the arrest and imprisonment and slieged aufferings and loss of health on the part of the pisintiff.

Upon the first count, if you find the words were spoken and hore the meaning attributed to them in the declaration, to charge the plaintiff with the crime of tr ason, then he will be entitled to damages by reason of injury to his character from those words spoken as they were in the defendant's house on Sunday, to Messrs. Wright and Jones. A more important question is upon the second count. You are to consider whether the words were spoken to Marshal Keyes as alleged, and whether the plaintiff, having the burden of proof, has satisfied you that they were spoken and were true, then you will give a verdict for the defendant. If they were spoken and were not true, then you are to consider whether it was a privileged communication then your verdict will be for the defendant. If it is not it will be for you to consider the question of damages in the light of the principles as I have stated.

Rolling Mril Destroyed by Firs.—On Monday afternoon the Lincoln Rolling Mill, owned by Cobb, McCloud & Co., of New York city, situated in Höllidaysburg, Pa., was burned to the ground. It is thought that the fire was caused by sparks of heated metal being blown from the stoain hammer to the carpenter shop, or some of the wood work of the bilding, and in a very few minutes the building was entirely destroyed, leaving a mass of blackened rulus. Fome of the heavy machinery is saved.
The large engine was injured, whether fatally or not we have not been informed. The fire apparatus in the rolling mill was first class. On the inventory taken by the proprietors the mill was valued at $125,000. It was insured in a New York company for $40,000. No estimate has yet been made of the loss, the proprietors being absent from town, but it is said it will be double the amount of the insurance. There was a high wind going at the time, which caused several buildings in the neighborhood,
among others the weigh-lock on the canal, to catch fire,
but it was promptly extinguished.—Pillburg Cammercial,
